Higher Order Server Pages

Dirk Draheim
Freie Universität Berlin

Gerald Weber
Freie Universität Berlin

Abstract. This papers describes the concept of higher order server pages, which allows for passing server pages as actual parameters to a targeted typed server page. It is explained how the higher order server pages concept can be exploited to foster system maintainability and system part reusability. An operational semantics of the resulting typed server pages technology is given as a transformation of the language features to proven object-oriented technology.